The Influence of Ibn Sinâ on Ğadr ad-Dìn Qînawî and His Followers

Ekrem Demirli *

Abstract:
This article is an investigation into the nature of the Sufi metaphysics of Ğadr ad-Dìn Qînawî and his followers. In contrast to previous scholars, who have considered Qînawî to be dismissive of philosophy in a way similar to Ghazâlî, the author shows that in fact philosophical metaphysics, and in particular the formulations of Ibn Sinâ, had a great impact on Qînawî and his followers in the school of Ibn ʿArabi in their attempt to develop ʿilm ilâhi (divine knowledge, i.e., metaphysics). Indeed, the influence of philosophical metaphysics is one of the crucial factors which distinguish the thought of this school from the earlier phase of theoretical Sufism.
The article begins with an overview of the two important phases in the history of theoretical Sufism, the school of Ibn ʿArabi being the second. Then the author considers how this second phase has been interpreted by traditional and contemporary scholars. Following this, in the main section of the article, the author analyses the metaphysics of Qînawî and indicates the way in which it was influenced by the philosophy of Ibn Sinâ.

Key Terms: Ibn Sinâ, Ğadr ad-Dìn Qînawî, sufism, the school of Ibn ʿArabi, metaphysics, ʿilm ilâhi (divine knowledge).

*Professor at Istanbul University, Turkey
E-mail: demirliekrem@yahoo.com
Introduction

Two Phases in the History of Sufism

Sufism emerged in Islamic society, affecting many affairs, both spiritual and physical, after undergoing a number of different processes. Sufism was sometimes a “reaction” that preferred poverty to social comfort, sometimes a “turning inwards” that elevated the individual above futile discussions in intellectual life, and sometimes it manifested itself as a “joyful expression” that took as its basis divine love and spiritual training as opposed to the strict religious sciences and torpid styles. However, its character as a movement of “morals and piety” was preserved in all these processes. The dynamic and complicated interactive process that existed between the Sufi tradition and the conditions of time and space under which Sufism developed acted as a mirror that indicated the social, political, cultural and intellectual transformations that Muslims underwent. Developing this principal idea, we will focus in this article on the influence of Ibn Sinā on Ḥadr ad-Dīn Qīnawī and his followers.

As it is known, the first theoretical trend of Sufism, which developed first as an ascetic movement, emerged owing to such writers as Sārāj, Qushayrī, and Kālabādhi, who were motivated by the problems that appeared in the ascetic period. The question that they were trying to answer in this period – an era that concentrated on determining the relationship between the Sharī‘ah (Divine Law) and the Ėaqīqah (Divine Reality) – was: what is Sufism and what is its place among the sciences? After a long struggle, the early Sufi historians were able to answer this question thus: “Sufism is one of the religious sciences, like kalām, fiqh, and hadīth”; however, this did not solve the problem.

The real problem would fully appear in the conception of Sufism that was to be formed under the leadership of Ibn ‘Arabi and which was systematized by Qīnawī. This period, known as the "period of the formation of Sunni Sufism," differs from the first period by claiming that Sufism has a central and determining place among the sciences. If we want to summarize the wide-ranging historical analysis that was first attempted by Ibn ‘Arabi and Qīnawī, it is possible to see the Sufism of the new period as the aim and product of all Islamic sciences. This meaning must be directly related to the theoretical traditions that came before Sufism and, therefore, must contain the same problems. According to Qānawi, what we are talking about now is not Sufism, but ‘ilm ilāhī (divine knowledge, i.e., metaphysics). In other words, Sufis called the sciences of the new era ‘ilm ilāhī and thus arrived at a stage, completely different from that wherefrom the first Sufi historians had started. Ibn ‘Arabī and Qānawi, both of whom turned to fiqh and kalām when they searched for proofs of the “legitimacy” of Sufism, also wanted to establish a superior and ultimate science which would be served by all the inferior sciences. This science was called metaphysics by Ibn Sinā. When one examines the history of Sufism, the conception of Sufism that appears in the new period is a new concept that is totally different from the conceptions of Sufism that appeared earlier. For this reason, the Sufism of the new period, from the moment it first appeared, has constantly been a field of contention of different opinions.
The Influence of Ibn Sinā on Gādr ad-Dīn Qānawi

Interpretations of the Second Phase of Sufism

The Sufism of this new era, suggests Ibn Khaldūn, should be considered as the “product of an integrating period.” According to Khaldūn, a comparison can be drawn between the Sufism of the new era and the development of the kalām. If we accept this approach, we can consider Qānawi to be the Fakhr al-Dīn Rāzī of the new era, and Sufism, like kalām, to be a product of this integrating era. If we keep in mind Ibn Khaldūn’s longing to return to the Sufism of the ascetic period, the Sufism purified of philosophy and mysticism, it is very clear that these aspects of the evaluation are justified. The most incorrect and inconsistent evaluation of Qānawi and his followers is given by Kātib Chelebi (Hājī Khalīfa). On the basis of weak proofs he relates Qānawi and his followers to Suhrawardī and qualifies them as part of the Ishrāqī (Illuminationist) movement. It is possible to find more examples of such incorrect evaluations of the concept of Sufism of Qānawi and his followers. In brief, the conception of Sufism which appeared in this period, if we take into account the entire history of Sufism, is one of the most debated issues. While Ibn Taymiyya, praising the asceticism of common Sufis, attacks the followers of Ibn
'Arabi and the new conception of Sufism, some mutakallimin – e.g. Taftazânî – choose the discussion of existence as the object of their criticism, thus giving it a more theoretical level. Such external criticism provoked a number of discussions among the Sufis themselves. In this connection, Abd al-Karim Jili (particularly his critical remarks about certain technical aspects of the waëdat-al wujïd), Alâ’ al-Dawlâ Simnânî and, in particular, Imâm Rabbânî (Aêmad Sirhindi), in my opinion, are most worthy of attention. Thus, the place of the new era Sufism in the history of science was always debated and, no doubt, this debate will continue.

Modern research qualifies the Sufism of this period as “philosophical Sufism”, thus trying to separate it from the ascetic Sufism of the earlier period. It is hoped that investigations into the Sufism of this period, a time that had a determining influence on Seljuk-Ottoman intellectual life, will lead to the formation of a more correct opinion.

Ģadr al-Dìn Qînawi

The figure who can be of most help for the correct understanding of the conception of Sufism in this era is Ģadr al-Dìn Qînawi. The assessments of the place and importance of Qînawi play a determining role in understanding the Sufism of the new era. As we know, the first serious academic research on Qînawi in Turkey was carried out by Dr. Nihat Keklik, who described him as the “13th century Ghazâli”. The basic reason why Nihat Keklik arrived at this conclusion must be that his study was focussed on the letters Qînawi exchanged with the Avicennian scholar, Nağîr al-Dìn Tîsi. In these letters Qînawi poses many questions to Tîsi about Ibn Sinâ’s philosophy, expressing doubts about the possibility of an “intellectual science.” The manner of Qînawi’s criticism must have led Nihat Keklik to such an evaluation. In my opinion, Keklik, whose study is in some aspects quite valuable, used an incorrect analogy. Interpreting Qînawi’s critical remarks on Ibn Sinâ from a narrow perspective, Keklik was influenced by the common criticism of intellectual reasoning, which was prevalent in Sufism from its very beginning. This did not allow him to correctly understand Qînawi’s thought as a whole. One of the most important consequences of this is that Qînawi’s use of the term ‘ilm ilâhî is overlooked. A sound and insightful study on Qînawi should be based upon his two main books – the Miftâh al-ghayb and the I’jâz al-bayân (his commentary on the Fâti‘ah). If we examine Qînawi’s thought taking these two works as our basis, we arrive at a conclusion which is exactly opposite to that of Nihat Keâlik’s. The second reason for this error is the exaggeration of the influence of Ghazâlî on the later Sufi tradition. This is a more common error than the first.

In this situation, if we use a similar comparison, the conclusion we can arrive at is this: Qînawi, particularly in metaphysics, is the “Ibn Sinâ of the 13th century”. This comparison could be thought to slightly overstep its mark, or even to be surprising when considering the specific situation of Sufism. However, if we carefully study the critical remarks, which, we suspect, have misled Nihat Keâlik, we can see that they are directed towards a totally different aim than the criticisms that are directed towards metaphysical thought as such. An important part of the criticisms are directed towards the use of the art of debate (or disputation) (jadâl) in metaphysical discussions. Qînawi, who is opposed to this, insistently defends metaphysical science and metaphysicians against some of Ghazâlî’s attacks. Without going into details, what we have to say is this: Qînawi, sometimes accepting the earlier criticisms, sometimes dismissing them, came to the conclusion that “despite all the objections, metaphysical knowledge is possible.”

It is clear that this conception presents a completely new trend in the history of Sufism. During this period the main problem, as evidenced in the Sufi works, was the determination of the relationship between Sufism and philosophy. While the early Sufis tried to correlate Sufism with fiqh and kalâm, in Qînawi’s time the problem was the determination of the place of Sufism in relation to philosophy; that is, the position of the Sufis vs. the metaphysicians. Starting with Ibn ‘Arabi, writers like Gadr al-Din Qînawi, Mu’ayyid al-Din Jandî, Sa’îd al-Din Farghânî, Dâwud Qaysari and Mullâ Fanârî examined this subject, trying to determine in what ways Sufis differed from philosophers, to what extent they could benefit from the teachings of the latter, and the relationship between the methods of Sufism and those used by philosophy. However, something more important can be seen in an idea expressed by Qīnawi in his correspondence with Tīsī. When discussing the position of Sufism in relation to the kalām and philosophy, Qīnawi uses an expression that perhaps cannot be found in any other era of Sufism: According to him, while Sufis disagree on almost every subject with kalām, the issues in which they differ from the mystic philosophers – here with the phrase ‘mystic philosophers’ Qīnawi is primarily referring to Ibn Sinā – are few. The difference of this statement from the words of Kalābādhi, who said: “Sufi belief is in complete agreement with the beliefs of the Sunnis,” is evident.

We would also like to draw attention to some terms used by Qīnawi that testify to Ibn Sinā’s influence: such influence of Ibn Sīna on Qīnawi and his followers can be best seen in their use of the expression ‘ilm ma’ ba’d ah-habī’ah. In other words, we can have definite knowledge about that which comes after nature – whatever it may be – just as we have it in other natural sciences. In my opinion, the matter that has most influenced the Sufis is the clarity and certainty of the contents of this synthesis. Sufis have to a large extent adopted the thoughts that Ibn Sīna expressed on this point. The criticisms that Sufis have made about the intellect and its power can only have meaning against this common background. The criticism of the information that the intellect provides about God is focused on the discussion of God’s attributes. Here, Sufis usually criticize their opponents in a general way, using the expression ahl-i naʿīr or “rationalists”, but sometimes they refer to Ibn Sīna by that name. The most important point of their criticism consists in the assertion that the intellect can only provide negative information about God. Claiming that there is a necessity to counterbalance tanzih (incomparability or the belief that God is free from any fault) and the negative, Sufis who accept waʿēdat al-wujūd base their understanding of God on this principle. Bringing to the fore comparison rather than negative information - because waʿēdat al-wujūd is not negative – they defend the existence of the set of attributes that are solely possessed by God. This subject is the heart of Ibn Sinā’s criticism on Sufis. This matter is one in which the Sufis, contrary to what Qīnawi suggests, take a position that is closer to that of the kalām theorists.

Qīnawi considers himself to be a metaphysician in the full sense of the word. In this regard, the subject, problems and principles of metaphysics have been discussed by Qīnawi in a detailed way. In all these matters he reiterates the opinions of Ibn Sinā. Sometimes Qīnawi, who presents metaphysics with the different designations given to it by Ibn Sinā, labels it as maʿrifat Allāh, ʿilm rabbānī, ʿilm ilāhī, or ʿilm al-ʾaqāʾiq, or sometimes as taʾqīq (verification) or ʿilm al-taʾqīq; those who possess these qualities are muʾaqqiqīn, ahl Allāh, or awliyāʾ kāmilah, etc.10 There is a specific reason and justification for each of these designations: First of all maʿrifat Allāh and ʿilm ilāhī can be considered to be synonyms. Here the designation is not according to the subject of the science, but rather according to the matter and the aim. In other words, ʿilm ilāhī, meaning knowing God and the divine, is much clearer in the first expression. Calling this ʿilm al-ʾaqāʾiq is in keeping with Ibn Sinā’s metaphysics of the knowledge of the first causes of the natural and mathematical existence and the cause of causes and the origin of the origins.11

The fact that the Sufis who came after Ibn ‘Arabī and Qīnawi perceived their science as ʿilm ilāhī or metaphysics, rather than as a system of concepts that explain Sufi spiritual life, opened the way to the creation of a conception that would explain existence. For example, while the terms qabqā and bash (‘contraction’ and ‘spreading out’) in the early (pre-Ibn ‘Arabī) period of Sufism referred to two states experienced by Sufis, in the new era these terms alluded to two states that were constantly experienced by the universe as a result of their being two attributes of God. Sufis have explained the idea of continuous creation with the aid of these two concepts, which they developed on the basis of the jawhar-ʿaraq theory of the kalām; this latter replaced the connection through causation of the contingent by the necessary that was included in the manifestation theory derived from Ibn Sīna. For this reason, the ethical contents of the concepts of the early Sufism were replaced, due to the influence of the teachings of Muslim philosophers and some mutakallimin, with metaphysical ones.
Qinawi deeply influenced subsequent Sufi and scientific conceptions. The commentaries written in this tradition, primarily on the Fugig al-âikam and Miftââ al-ghayb, contributed to his influence a lot, giving an important place to him in philosophical discussions. The influence of Ibn Sinâ upon Ibn ʿArabi and Qinawi can be seen clearly in the change of the contents of Sufi literature. To show the change in the content of Sufi literature it is enough to compare the books of this period, in particular, Fugig al-âikam and Miftââ al-ghayb, with any Sufi work belonging to the previous period. For example, the umîr ʿâmmah (‘common affairs’) are discussed at the beginning of the Fugig al-âikam. The main problems discussed in the Fugig are the problems like why God created the universe, the place of human being in the universe, the relationship between the beings/things in the universe and God. Miftââ al-ghayb starts with a discussion of scientific classifications and subjects, as well as their matters and principles. In this regard, starting with the theory of nafs, the most important issues in which the Sufis were influenced by philosophers include the relationship between God and the universe, causality and manifestation. On the other hand, the relationship of the prior and the posterior, cause and effect, and, in connection with this, the relationship of the macrocosm to the microcosm and the issue of oneness and manyness were the most important problems of Sufism in this period. As it is well known, all these issues occupy an important place in post-Avicennian metaphysical thought.

Probably the most important part of the Akbarian Sufi literature are the so-called “wujîd treatises”. These treatises were written as common introductions to Sufism and almost all of them begin with the expression “existence in so far as it is considered [only] as existence” (wujîd bi mâ’ huwa wujîd) – a phrase that we are familiar with from the metaphysics of Ibn Sinâ. However, Sufis, unlike Ibn Sinâ, considered this to be an expression that indicates God. Thus, the phrase “existence in so far as it is considered [only] as existence is God” is frequently quoted in Sufi texts as the first premise of the concept of waâdat-al wujîd. Another area of literature which is as important as this subject is the “aʾyân thâbitah” treatises. The issue of the aʾyân thâbitah was perhaps the most important issue of the new age of Sufism. While the issue deals with the attributes of God on the one hand, on the other it discusses the relationship between possible existence and God. The Sufis sometimes express their views on these matters in a comparative manner. For example, what the Sufis call aʿyān thābitah, the philosophers refer to as “nature”, while the mutakallimin call it maʿlīm maʿdīm (‘the known non-existent’).\(^{15}\)
The Influence of Ibn Sinā on Ḥadr ad-Dīn Qīnawi

Moreover, the concepts of necessary existence and contingent existence have an important place in the arguments of accidental relationship, causation and destiny in Sufi texts; in all these discussions the Sufis refer to the views of the philosophers. For example, in Jandi’s commentary on the Fuğīğ, after presenting a variety of views concerning astronomy and cosmography, attention is focused on the difference in opinions between Sufis and philosophers. In his treatise on time, Dāvud Qaysari discusses in detail the views of Muslim philosophers, criticizing the view of Abī Barakāt al-Baghdādī on time.\(^{16}\) Mullā Fānārī gives a lot of attention to the discussion of existence in his Miğbāē al-uns and defends the Sufi view of existence against the views of philosophers. Other commentators of the Miṣḥāē al-ghayb, like Qutb al-Dīn Iznīqī, Ṭapazārī, Uṭmān Ilāhī and Bursawī, quote the views of Ibn Sinā, sometimes referring to him by name, sometimes alluding to the Shifāʾ or his other books. Because of this, Ibn Sinā and his works have spread over a wider area and have been read sometimes through Qīnawi’s works and sometimes directly through his works themselves. On the other hand, if we also take into account some commentaries on books which were of great importance in Sufism, in particular Rīmī’s Mathnawi, and some other texts which had a great impact on the Akbarian tradition, we can better estimate the influence of Avicennian metaphysics on the later Sufi tradition – the influence which spread mostly through Qīnawi and his followers.

In order to correctly evaluate Qīnawi and his followers, it is necessary to constantly have in mind two sources of his inspiration: the first of which is traditional Sufism. Traditional Sufi practices and methods, those things that make a Sufi a Sufi, compel us to consider Ibn ‘Arabī and his followers as Sufis. The second source is the metaphysical thought, whose main champion was Ibn Sinā. Sufis who relied on this method expressed their views of existence predominantly in the terms of Ibn Sinà’s metaphysical perceptions. However, important contributions were also made by a number of Mutakallimin.

Conclusion:
The Sufi conception, formulated by Ibn ‘Arabì and Ğadr al-Din Qînawî, aimed to reconstruct Ibn Sinà’s conception of metaphysics. However the change of the aim and methods used here did not change the general situation. Thus, if we leave aside the Sufi conception, the new era – in particular as manifested in the texts of Qînawî, from the point of view of the language and concepts used – can be designated, in the true sense of the word, as the era of following in the footsteps of Ibn Sinà. in particular, when we consider the ideas about God’s existence, the relationship between the necessary and the contingent, destiny, the issue of the nafs, and existence, we can see that Sufi thought is based on that of Ibn Sinà.

References:
The Influence of Ibn Sinā on Ǧadr ad-Dīn Qinawī

12. ʿĪbnūʾl-ʿArabī, Fusūsuʾl-Hikem, trans. into Turkish by Ekrem Demirli, Istanbul: Kabalcı 2006, p. 25

Works Cited:
- Demirli, Ekrem, ʿĪbnūʾl-ʿArabī ve Vahdet-i Vücūd Ekolü, Istanbul: Kabalcı 2008
- Demirli, Ekrem, Sadreddin Konevî’de Bilgi ve Varlık, Istanbul: İz 2005
- ʿĪbnūʾl-ʿArabī, Fusūsuʾl-Hikem, trans. into Turkish by Ekrem Demirli, Istanbul: Kabalcı 2006
- ʿĪbnūʾl-ʿArabī, Fūṭūhāt-ı Mekkiyye, trans. into Turkish by Ekrem Demirli, Istanbul: Litera 2006
- Ibn Sina, Metafizik, translated into Turkish by Ekrem Demirli and Ömer Türker, İstanbul: Litera 2004
- Keklik, Nihat, Sadreddin Konevî’de Allah, Kainat ve İnsan, İ.Ü. Edebiyat Fak. Yay. İstanbul, 1967
- Konevî, Sadreddin, Fatiha Suresi Tefsiri (translated into Turkish by Ekrem Demirli), Istanbul: İz 2002
- Konevî, Sadreddin, Tasavvuf Metafiziği, trans. into Turkish by Ekrem Demirli, Istanbul: İz, 2002
- Konevî, Sadreddin, Yazışmalar, translated into Turkish by Ekrem Demirli, Istanbul: İz 2002
- Nablusi, Abdülgani, Gerçek Varlık, translated into Turkish by Ekrem Demirli, Istanbul: İz 2004